

Carbon Copy Cloner For Mac

	Use CCC to clone one disk to another, selectively back up your files to another hard drive or remote Mac, back up
	Preferences
	Automatically create an archive of Lion's Recovery HD volume
Sourc Selee Items	When creating a backup of Mac OS X Lion to a locally-attached volume, CCC will automatically create an archive of the hidden Recovery HD volume. This will occur at the end of the backup task, saving the archive to /Library/Application Support/com.bombich.ccc/Recovery HD.dmg. CCC can subsequently use that archive to restore the Recovery HD at a later time.
	Automatically save to a disk image on non-HFS+ formatted destinations
	Non-HFS+ formatted destinations, including any mounted network volume, do not support the HFS+ filesystem metadata that is required to faithfully reproduce an installation of Mac OS X. If you regularly require the preservation of these metadata, you can choose to have CCC create a disk image on these volumes by default.
	Indicate when a block-level clone is possible
	This option will add a "Block copy" button adjacent to the destination menu. When the conditions required for a block-level copy are met, the button will be enabled and you can choose to require a block-level copy.
	Don't show a warning when choosing the startup disk as the destination
	CCC protects the OS installation on your startup disk when you choose that volume as the destination to a backup/restore task. CCC will inform you about the automatic filter imposed unless you disable that warning here.
	Sk for confirmation before pruning archive content during an ad hoc task
What i Pleas	If CCC finds it necessary to delete items from the _CCC Archives folder on the destination (due to your archive pruning settings), CCC asks for confirmation by default. This setting is not applicable to scheduled tasks, scheduled tasks will always prune archives as necessary, per your settings, without asking for additional confirmation.
